

Bio of Vivian Wang

Vivian is an experienced Chinese medicine practitioner who has been practicing since 2015 in New Zealand, primarily in Dunedin and Auckland. She is currently studying postgraduate degree in health science, specializing in pain and pain management, from Otago University, where she has been studying for the past three years.

With her extensive knowledge of acupuncture and pain management, Vivian has dedicated herself to exploring the underlying mechanisms of acupuncture and its effectiveness in reducing pain. She is passionate about increasing awareness and understanding of the benefits of acupuncture in pain management and sharing her knowledge of the latest research in this field.

As a qualified acupuncturist, Vivian is dismayed by the lack of involvement of acupuncture practitioners with the Pain Society NZ, despite the growing interest and awareness of the value of this ancient practice in modern-day pain management. Vivian is determined to advance the field of pain management within the context of acupuncture and provide valuable insights into the future direction of this fascinating field.

Vivian's expertise and dedication make her an ideal candidate for presenting at conferences. She is committed to sharing her knowledge of the latest research and exploring the potential of acupuncture in pain management. Whether you are a fellow practitioner or simply interested in the latest developments in this field, Vivian's insights and expertise are sure to captivate and enlighten audiences.
